Dear Fellow Pilgrims

The following meditation is from “Wellsprings” by Anthony De Mello. We invite you to read the following meditation slowly. Regretfully we have had to start at the fourth verse due to space considerations, however, these lines are more apt for our own per-

May God bless your meditation:

*I have myself arrived at where I am today through countless wasted hours of boredom,
useless conversations,
pastimes,
incapacitating sickness, or sufferings I was fool enough to bring upon myself.
Through energy I squandered on unproductive planning, stillborn projects,
fruitless undertakings.*

*I contemplate the myriad opportunities I threw away,
The talents I neglected,
The challenges I dare not face, The promises that never were
And, worse still, never will be kept.*

*I contemplate this not with sadness, not with guilt,
but with patient understanding, for I wish to love life as much for its failures as in its success.*

As I recall the parable the Lord gave us as a symbol of the kingdom:

The sower goes out to sow his seed; some of it falls on rocky soil, some among thorns and thistles, some on the road where it is trampled on 3 or eaten by birds, and some of it bears a hundredfold or maybe less, just thirtyfold or sixty.

*And I love the whole of that field.
I love the rock
and the fertile soil, the pathway
and the thorns and thistles, for all of it is part of life.
I love the seed that is sensationally fruitful* *and the seed that has just average success.

Today I especially love the seed that is sown only to perish so that before it goes into oblivion it will be blessed and redeemed by my love.*

*Finally, I look at the Saviour on the cross, Symbolizing in his broken body and his unsuccessful mission the drama of life in general and my life in particular.
I love him too,
and I press him to my heart I understand that somewhere, somehow, all of it has meaning, all of it redeemed
and made beautiful and resurrected.*
